U.S. Voices Optimism As Carter Sees Saudis

On Palestinian Issue

By Edward Walsh

RIYADH, Jan. 3 (WP).-President Carter returned to the Mid-dle East today to sound out the Saudi government before his meeting tomorrow with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat.

The President went immediately from the airport bere to a meeting with King Khaled, and later tonight met with Crown Prince Fahd.

En route from New Delhi, a senior administration official cautioned against expecting major developments from the talks here and predicted that Prince Fahd would press the Saudi position of favoring "self-determination" for the Palestinians along the West Bank of the Jordan River and in the Gaza Strip.

But the official, in a surprisingly optimistic comment, said of the Saudis, "it would appear they may be in the process of moving to our approach on the Palesti-

The U.S. official also said aboard Air Force One that Mr. Carter, when he meets with Mr. Sadat, will seek the answers to three questions.

The official said the questions are: what does Mr. Sadat expect from the political and military talks between Israel and Egypt scheduled to begin in Jerusalem and Cairo in the middle of this month, what kind of positions will Mr. Sadat put forward when full peace negotiations begin with Israel, and what are Mr. Sadat's specific objections to Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin's proposals on a limited form of self-rule for the Palestinians on the West Bank and in Gaza?

The President, the official said, will "say specifically: How do you evaluate these things, how

Hope to Lessen Tensions

The hope is that during this period the tensions in the area would subside as Israell domina-tion would be phased out, that moderate local Palestinian leaders would get stronger, and that the more radical elements of the Palestine Liberation Organization living in extle in Lebanon and other Arab countries would lost their present hold over the West

But sources close to both regimes have expressed the view privately that the PLO is losing ground. Their contention is that the announcement of a "fair deal" for the West Bank Palestinians including self-determination and phased Israeli withdrawal, would break the organization's hold on the population there altogether.

ROTTERDAM, Jan. 3 (NYT) .-Johannes Jacobson, who owns a small drygoods store across from Waalhaven, one of the older harbors in Rotterdam's huge port, puts its succinctly: "There are an awful lot of Russians around here The number of Russians and

Eastern European merchant marine sailors frequenting his shop has tripled during the last few years, Most of the containers on the docks across the street carry the mark of Transworld Marine, a shipping agency largely controlled by the Russians. Ships from the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe are the largest con-tingent in Waalhaven, and are also prominent at other docks throughout Europe's largest port. The rapid expansion of Russian merchant shipping, not only in Europe but also throughout the world, has emerged as a serious problem facing the merchant fleets of the West.

"It is in fact the independence of the foreign trade of countries with free market economies and the survival of Western fleets which are at stake, and it would be dangerous for the future if the full implications of this problem were neglected," the European Economic Community said in a report earlier this year.

The concern is focused on the increase in Soviet, and to a lesser

The Russians have also achieved a position of absolute dominance in bilateral trade with Western European countries. Soviet ships carry more than twothirds of the cargo between the Soviet Union and Britain, 95 per cent of the cargo between Russia and the Netherlands, and threefourths of bilateral trade with West Germany—arousing protests from all three nations. According to the European Economic Community and Western European shippers, this growth has taken place because of beavy price-cutting by the Russians, with rates ranging from 18 to 40 per cent less than those charged on the same routes by Western companies.

Gen Pinochet has other reasons for feeling confident. Bombs Blast Turkish Offices in 2 Countries

LONDON, Jan. 3 (UPI).-Bombs in London and Brussels yesterday damaged buildings housing Turkish banking services and an Armenian underground group claimed responsibility for both attacks.

In the first incident, a bomb exploded outside the Turkish Bank in suburban Haringey. The blast blew in the bank's windows. Troops, standing in for striking firefighters, put out a small fire. No one was hurt.

An anonymous caller told a news agency the "New Armenian Resistance" was responsible for the blast

The police said they were investigating but had no evidence to link the incident with a car bomb explosion on New Year's Eve which killed two Syrian Embassy officials.

The manager of the Turkish Bank, Mahmut Nurt, said he had "no idea why we should have become a terrorist target. There have been no threats, nor have we had any trouble of any kind." Mr. Nuri said most of the bank's clients were Turkish Cypriots as its headquarters was in Cyprus but "we also have many Turkish customers."

But even those Arab diplomats who do not favor independence for the proposed new Palestinian entity, want to see the option of an independent state maintamed as a matter of principle.

They criticize Mr. Carter for naving come out publicly against Palestinian independence.

Foreclosing independence now, they argue, can only strengthen the extremists among the PLO leaders and further radicalize the West Bank Palestinians.

There are several reasons why President Sadat has chosen to emphasize Egyptian flexibility on the Palestinian issue in his meeting with President Carter. As Western diplomats here see it, the Egyptians are auxious to break the deadlock on basic issues that developed between them and the Israeli negotiators at Ismailia. The only way to do so, in the Egyptian view, is to shift the negotiations away from the unsatisfactory specifics of Prime Minister Menahem Begin's plan and to start talking about m-derlying "principles," the nature of peace, security arrangements, withdrawal and the Palestine mestion

The Egyptian contention is that once the principles are enunciated, the specifics can be solved to the satisfaction of both the Arabs and Israel Mr. Sadst clearly wants to sell-this approach to Mr. Carter. In addition, Mr. Sadat will seek to enlist Mr. Carter's help in convincing the Israelis that by focusing the negotiations on principles instead of details the stalled momentum of the peace offensive can be restored.

Seen on Palestinians

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3 (NYT). _U.S. officials have detected the outline of a possible compromise between Israel and Egypt over the Palestinian question despite the well - publicized differences between Prime Minister Menahem

Begin and President Sadat. Officials said that the essence of the projected arrangement is in persuading Mr. Begin to alter somewhat his elaborate plan for granting Palestinians on the West Bank and Gaza Strip self-rule so as to incorporate the possibility of allowing the Palestinians ultimate self-determination as demanded by Mr. Sadat and other Arab leaders.

The problem is delicate, officials said, because implicit in permitting 'self-determination' is the possibility that Palestinians might choose an independent state, dominated by radicals from the Palestine Liberation Organiza-

The Right Formula

But since neither Israel, Egypt Jordan nor the United States wants such a PLO-dominated inependent state to exist, U.S. officials said there is broad support for finding the right formula to handle the situation.

Conversations with Egyptian, tarach and Jordanian leaders by U.S. officials have produced cautious optimism hers that the scheduled meeting in Jerusalem Jan. 15 involving Egyptian and Israeli foreign ministers with Sec-retary of State Cyrus. Vance will be productive.

The goal of the Jerusalem meeting is not to negotiate a detailed solution but rather to come up with a set of principles to ride further negotiations perhaps at Geneva—in which Jordan would participate.

It is anticipated that if all goes well the Jerusalem meeting would set forth Israel's willingness to negotiate withdrawals from land seized from Egypt and Syria and principles to govern a olution of the Palestinian prob-

Normal Belations The Egyptians would pledge in turn that Israel would be entitled to live in peace with its security enhanced and that normal relations would ensue. The details would be decided in future negotiations, but the Palestinian situation is the key question to be settled at Jerusalem because unless the principles for negotiation are acceptable to Egypt, Jordan and Israel, further negotiations will be impossible.

Israel already has said it would give up all the land taken from Egypt in the 1967 war in return for security guarantees, and presumably once Syria entered negotlations, something would be said of the extent of the withdrawal from Syrian land also televised interview last week were reported in the Arab world as favoring Mr. Begin's plan. Mr. Sadat was subsequently prompt. ed by television reporters to express 'disappointment and embarrassment" over Mr. Carter's remarks.

Diplomatic Channels

Sinre then. Mr. Sadat, through diplomaticm channels, had told Washington that he was not that upset by the comments, officials said. The Aswan meeting will however, provide an opportunity to give further impetus to negotiations by stressing the need for flexibility on all sides.

As explained by U.S. officials, this is the situation and the cause for the feeling that a set of principles to guide negotiations is possible: Mr. Begin in his 26-point plan offered something that is unacceptable on the surface and in fact has bene rejected by the Arabs. But there are elements in it that Mr. Carter and his ton aides believe contain the seed of a compromise. Namely, Mr. Begin said military occupation in the West Bank and Gaza Strip would end. that sovereignty would be unspecified, that Palestinian Arabs would have self-rule over all domestic concerns, and that the plan would be subject to review after five years. Other aspects opposed by the Egyptians allow for continued Israeli military presence to maintain security and public order, the right of Israelis to buy land, and for limits on immigration of other Palestinians.

Mr. Sadat has stressed that he wants the Palestinian entity that emerges to be linked to Jordan. He has usually called that entity a "state," but some Egyptians have suggested that it might be an independent state no more than a few hours, pending its formal linkage to Jordan, in 2 confederation or some structure_

The United States has followed an ambiguous course. On the one hand, Mr. Carter has called for the creation of a Palestinian homeland or entity. But when Israelis criticized him for leaving the door open to a separate state, he said the United States preferred that the entity not be a state and that it be linked to

Jordan. On the other hand, the United States has also supported the idea of self-determination for the Palestinians. Last August, Mr. Vance proposed an international, or Jordanian-Israeli, trusteeship for the West Bank to be followed after five years by a plebiscite to determine its future. The Israelis rejected the idea, however, on the grounds that this would lead inevitably to a the area. Americans now believe, however, that such a development would be less likely given the community of interests Egypt. Israel and to a lesser to the security provision and imposing a news blackout. Reports are circulating here that the government is going ahead with development plans for existing Israeli settlements on Arab lands occupied since the 1967 war, particularly in the Rafah salient in the northern Sinal, which Israel has regarded as strategic. The reports were met with silence today from the government. There was speculation that this topic came up at the Cabinet meeting today. Response to Sadat

Referring to an interview with Mr. Sadat on U.S. television, in which the Egyptian leader said Mr. Carter should apply pressure to igrael, Mr. Begin said: I call upon him not to issue calls for the imposition of pressure upon Is-rael. I never asked the government of the United States to impose pressure on Egypt. We, the representatives of Egypt and israel, are in a phase of serious negotiations for peace—a comprehensive peace in the Middle East and to sign peace treaties. Environmentalists Give Carter's Conduct a Mixed Review

Environmental leaders interviewed last week gave the Carter administration similar mixed reviews for its performance in its first year in office.

They agreed that the President's commitment to improving and safeguarding the environment is all that they could have wished for and that his appointments to key environmental posts have generally been outstanding. But they also contend that the results so far have not lived up to the promise.

Mr. Wallace's strategy in assembling the refinery project is to line up commit-ments, each contingent on the others. He has an agreement with the Alabama Gas Co. for the utility to buy $1 billion worth of propane during the next 20 years-if he can produce it. He has contracts to build the refinery if he can finance it.

Mr. Brimmer said his job will be to

Mr. Wallace is up against a "Catch 22" situation, said John Adams, a special assistant to Mr. Wallace and head of his Washington office. The Pentagon will not eward a contract to an unbuilt refrience, and the refinery cannot be built without the contract. A Peningon spokesman said negotiations with Mr.

Wallace are continuing. In addition to lobbying the Pentagon, Mr. Westere's Washington office also is seeking assurances from the SBA that the company can retain its favored 8A contractor status at least until the refinery has been in operation for a couple of years. The government heating-off contracts would provide another major outlet for the refinery's produc-tapped conversations and a swatted fly. President Carter's discussions with Prime Minister Desai in New Delhi came to grips with a vital nuclear problem. The problem was not solved, despite the cordiality of the occasion and an agreed declaration at its end. But at least it was stated.

Essentially, of course, the primary nuclear question is whether the major powers will court suicide by engaging in nuclear war. From that critical issue flow the matters of how those powers are to prevent such a catastrophe and what is to be done to check other states from making-or explodingmilitary nuclear devices. And both of these are complicated by the peaceful use of atomic power, which is the subject of increasing controversy. Developing nations strongly desire nuclear energy as an alternative to expensive petroleum or scarce water and eoal; many environmentalists are coneerned about the effects of nuclear power and its dangers to the life which surrounds it; many more fear that weapons will be a by-product, or the main product, of such

Apparently Mr. Carter was successful in reaching agreement with the Shah of Iran on controls over nuclear fuels for that country. But India, while its Prime Minister insists it has no intention of making or using nuclear weapons, professes to regard those controls as an infringement of its sovereignty -and an effort by the nuclear superpowers to impose their will on the rest of the world.

So the New Delhi meetings did not bring the United States and India into accord on how imported nuclear fuels are to be used.

Despite the elements of farce injected by but Mr. Carter promised that they would be delivered, as well as heavy water. And in the final declaration, while there was a vague statement that "the danger of nuclear proliferation must be arrested," it was preceded by another: "Existing stockpiles of nuclear weapons must be reduced and eventually eliminated."

It is easy enough to quarrel with the Indian stand, and to be suspicious of its real intentions with respect to nuclear weapons. It is also true that several industrialized countries, notably West Germany and France, have a strong interest in promoting sales of their nuclear power plants, without too much regard for the use to which nuclear fuel may be put,

However, the chief responsibility for controlling nuclear weaponry rests on the two nations—the United States and the Soviet Union-which have produced so much of that weaponry. Their primary strategic coneern may be to balance their bombs so that neither side would be tempted to use them. But their primary global duty is to assure the rest of the world that they demand no more from it than they are willing to give. In other words, Moscow and Washington. must set the example of reducing the nuclear danger-as they set the example of creat-

Emphasizing this was the most important result of the hassle in New Delhi. It must not be regarded wholly as a dispute between the United States and India, but as a challenge to both Moscow and Washington to diminish their own military capability, in nuclear and conventional arms, so that they can call upon other states to follow, rather

The Neutron Question

The leaders of the Soviet Union and Poland have now chimed in with their personal judgments on the neutron bomb—the new nuclear warhead, relatively small in blast but large in radiation, that the United States proposes to deploy in Western Europe against the specific threat of a massive Soviet tank attack. Many Europeans have the jitters about this new device. Some accept the hysterical argument that, by being designed to hurt people more than property, It is somehow "immoral." Others see it as a weapon close enough to being considered conventional that it might invite early use and bring on an escalating nuclear exchange. The Soviet and Polish leaders sought to propel these jitters along, warning that the deployment of this "inhuman" weapon would touch off a new arms race, lower the nuclear threshold, and much more.

They are entitled to their views. But the genuine dilemma at the heart of the neutron-bomb dispute, and at the heart of Russian as well as Western nuclear dialogue, remains: How can the threat of using a tactical nuclear weapon be made to appear persuasive or credible enough to deter an enemy, without, at the same time, making nuclear war itself more "thinkable" or perhaps provoking that enemy to go nuclear first in an armed confrontation? The Army, in setting out to modernize some of its 7,000 tactical nuclear weapons in Europe, wanted chiefly to make a NATO nuclear response to an overwhelming Soviet conventional attack more credible. We do not dismiss the Army's logie. But we find the answering argument more persuasive: NATO's temptation to use a neutron warhead, and the Warsaw Pact's anticipation of its use, could too easily initiate a nuclear exchange that no one could be sure would be contained. The proper alternative, we believe, is to improve conventional defense. A number of specialists believe the new precision-guided anti-tank missiles fill the bill.

In Warsaw Friday, President Carter contended that the Soviet Union's new mobile SS-20 missiles, trained on West Europe, are more destabilizing and destructive than the neutron bomb would be. He suggested that SALT discussions on strategic weapons be followed by Soviet-American talks on all tactical nuclear arms. But the beginning, let alone the end, of such talks is surely some years aways. The issue of neutron warhead deployment is pending now. Given the Carter administration's pledge to await a pro-neutron consensus in NATO before deploying, the issue will be decided in West Europe, especially in West Germany, NATO's key European member and the country in which the warheads would be deployed. So far the peculiar mixture of emotional and strategic consideration drenehing this issue has prevented the Germans from taking a public decision. We hope that they decide against the new weapons and that they explain their choice in terms contributing to reason and calm in the security debate. In a system where decisions of considerable technical complexity and emotional content are taken by democratie process, the way in which strategie issues are discussed can determine the way they are decided, too. The neutron question goes far beyond the question of the merits of the bomb.

The wife of Rudolf Hess brought him a bunch of roses and irises the other day, to mark their 50th wedding anniversary. And for the first time in more than 30 years, the war eriminal in Spandau Prison in West Berlin was allowed to receive them. We hope this display of sentiment by his fourpower jailers represents a softening-particularly by the Russians—of the attitude that has kept Hitler's former deputy alone in his prison of four three-story buildings for a decade. That 83-year-old man costs the West German government about $300,000 a. year; he is guarded by 45 soldiers-American, British, French and Russian-on a rotating tasis. Bugged Bruin

The situation was pregnant with potential for misunderstanding. A hig white polar bear, an expectant mother, wandered north from Point Barrow, Alaska, wearing a radio collar for easy tracking by American scientists. Then she headed west into Soviet territory. Would the Soviets accept her as an innocent intruder who had lost her bearings? Or had they heard those tales about animals trained for clandestine missions? A cable to Moscow brought reassurance. The Russians will mount an expedition over the pack ice of the West Siberian Sea to look for the errant bruin, which is probably planning to hibernate in an ice den until April, when she is expected to drop two cubs and thus triple the border violations. But at least the wandering bear is not likely now to shiver the timbers of detente. And if the Russians find the bear in time, they may even be able to give new meaning to rural free delivery.

WASHINGTON—The meeting of the Cabinet yesterday was devoted to a consideration of the case of a colored postmistress at Indianola, Miss., who was forced to resign her position owing to deliberate indignities from the white citizens. The incident has incensed President Roosevelt greatly, and it is known that he expressed his indignation in no measured terms at the Cabinet meeting. Acting on the President's demand, the Cahinet decided to close the post office entirely.

When fear was generally felt here that the sympathizers of Sacco and Vanzetti might attempt to bomb the Capitol, the dome was closed and guards were stationed temporarily about the building. The Chinese press speaks of a devilish plot "to involve others in a war of attrition," as Chamberlain supposedly wanted to involve Germany and Russia to divert Hitler from the West China now says there are those in the United States—and by this clearly means the Carter administration—who hope that they can divert the Soviet Union to the east in order to free themselves from the Soviet peril at the expense of the secu-rity of other metions,"

The Sonnenfeldt doctrine was designed to "assurge the aggressome respite and at least gain some respite for the United States, Peking says—and now Carter is seen by it to pursue the same objectives. Sommenfeldt it says, tried to "frighten" Moscow with the prospect that China would before long emerge as "the third superpower," and he sought in this way to make the Soviet Union "shift the focus of its aggression to the east." The clear implication is that Carter is now doing the same.

'Dirty Deal'

The "compromise and concessions" now being offered by the United States to the Soviet Union are designed, in Peking's view. "to preserve global U.S. interests." Peking believes that Washington and Moscow are secretly negotisting a number of deals that would undermine China's security. "But the days when a few imperialist powers divided the world into spheres of influence behind closed doors are gone forever," it says, even as it protests against the "dirty deal" which might reduce the U.S. and Soviet presence in the Indian Ocean and release the Soviet Navy to pay more attention to China.

What would the Soviet Union gain if it responded to the supposed U.S. promptings? The "essence" of the Munich agreement, Peking says, was the dismemberment of Csechoslovakia, which was handed over to Hitler to induce him to attack Russia and it implies that Washington might. now acquiesce in the dismemberment of China as a reward to the Kremlin. Peking's emphasis on the weakness and faintheartedness of the United States, on U.S. willingness to "appease" Moscow at the cost. of "others" to save the United States even to the point of . "shendoning" Europe in case of a Soviet attack—is at the root of the new Chinese policy debate.

The success of the Queen's Jubilee took most detached observers by surprise.

I ONDON -- Probably the most memorable feature of last year for most Britons was not the declining standard of living, the collapse of the car industry or the recovery of James Callaghan, but the Jubilee of the Queen. And in spite of all the verbiage that has been spun round the subject, it's still worth trying to analyse, in the cold light of January, exactly why, for the Jubilee had several odd characteristics.

Its success took most detached observers, and nearly all intellectuals, by surprise—though not the royal family itself. At the peak of the Jubilee mania, when nearly every back street seemed to be fluttering with bunting, I asked a member of the royal family who had been touring the country whether he was not rather amazed. He said, "No, it's what we expected: I think it's only the kind of people who go away for weekends who didn't expect it."

But the enjoyment of the Jubilee did not have very much to do with the personality of the Queen herself: indeed there were several occasions when she appeared to be bored by the whole business. It is very noticeable that the royal family, while living in a world of high pageantry, has no real theatrical flair of the kind that might make the job more enjoyable. The only apparent excep-tion is Prince Charles, who enjoys acting and opera and has shown considerable panache in his tours; But we may well have to wait 30 years for the reign of the merry King Charles.

Quick Retreat

The rest of the royal family, in the midst of the celebrations, has not shown any very visible signs of requiting their subjects' affec-tions, and this was especially marked when the Queen's eldest daughter, Princess Anne, gave pirth to a son last November. ent of the public and the media was unbounded: TV programs ignored the world news to give every detail of the life of the princess and her military husband. But the princess herself made hardly any concession to the public curlosity, and quickly retreated into the buge and secluded country house which her

Yet in spite of this determined sloofness at the center, the Julilee released a burst of festivity which was both spontaneous and communal, with street parties, village bun-fights, and huge waiting crowds the members of which seemed to be brought suddenly, mysteriously closer to each other. It is not enough to say that the Jubilee was just an excuse for a party, a kind of extra Christmas. for the Jubilee fever seemed able to generate a party spirit and to break down barriers in the most image of the Queen could clearly achieve some tribal unification It has been an odd spectacle to the midst of a recession, under an egalitarian Labor government with an increasingly vocal left wing, to watch the public adoration for this very rich private family—and the small band of anti-monarchists and republicans have hardly dared open their

No Criticism

The frustrations of the republicans have been vividly described by Richard Crossman, who was Lebor Cabinet minister, in diaries published posthumously last year. He explained how eight years ago he and two other republicans in the Cabinet—Roy Jenkins and Barbara Castle-were outraged when Prince Philip complained that the royal family was not getting enough money. "The Queen pays no estate or death complained Crossman, duties." "and they are inordinately wealthy." The republicans in the Cabinet wanted a committee to look into the Queen's fortune. but they were quickly defeated by the more working-class mem-bers, ied by James Callaghan, who would brook no criticism of the royal family from these middle class intellectuals.

It is thus not surprising that today Callaghan, as Prime Min-ister, should see the Queen as a natural ally, bringing a sense of security and reassurance to the working-class voter; and in this atmosphere the Tory party can gain little advantage from their past record as the royalist party and the defenders of tradition

The Jubilee celebrations showed a sublime lack of contact with the problems of contemporary Britain and the Labor government was thankful for the escapism. The royal family still projects an essentially 18th-century life-style, of country houses, horse racing, hunting, and military displays, Such royal insulation has often been a recipe for disaster, as it was for the Romanoffs, but in Britain's constitutional system it appears to edd to the monarch's security, removing her from the awkward and painful problems of industrial survival, into a world of rural nostalgia and reassurance which might be part of the most romantic TV serial.

And behind the romanticism and antique pageantry there still lies the shrewd political sense of the Queen and her advisers, who have learned, as the Romanoffs never did, that the retention of privilege depends on bending with the political winds. Few people would have guessed 25 years ago that the Queen would be the heroice of the Labor party, and even if a British Communist government were to some to nower in another 25 years, it is safe to predict that the monarch, with estates intact, would still be there, making the speech from the unpromising conditions and the throne proclaiming the new dogma.

WASHINGTON. Jammy Carter

Carter the campaigner and Carter the novice President was a handyman eager to fix up the home place—to remove the rust from the economic pipes, rebuild the rickety structure of the federal bureaucracy, replace the eyesore tax and welfare codes and correct the dangerous lean in the budget by putting it back into balance.

When he drained the pond in Plains of its accumulated debris right after the Democratic Conventions of 1976, it was understood as a graphic metaphor of his intention to clean up the mess in Washington and the domestic actions SEEC SCOTTONINY

Well, after a year of mucking in that mess, a year of hagging arguments with Congress and the interest groups about what ought to be done and in what order, Carter gratefully shocked his blue jeans and work shirt and jumped into diplomatic pinstripes and set off to see the world.

Nobody can blame him. But equally no one should minimise the importance of what has importance of what has importance pened.
The most striking thing, to me, in the President's year-end in-terview with the four pelevision networks was the sharp contrast between his optimism on international questions and the weari-ness and resignation with which he spoke of domestic issues." Sadat and Begin, he said, are well-launched on their quest for : a Middle Eastern peace, and the United States is ready to help them schieve it. The SALT talks with Russia are going well, and a treaty—with a Breakney summit in Washington is probable in 1978. The Panama Canal trea-bles will be ratified this year. Welfare reform is in deep trouble in the House. The promised national health insurance plan will be introduced late this year. high," wants everyone to know in advance it will not pass. As for energy, the failure in that area is a "cloud ... over the determination and leadership qualities of the nation."

Three quick observations on all

First, let no one think the shift of focus is of no significance. Presidents, like the rest of us, work hardest where they see hope of success. Even for a worksholic like Carter, time spent on the international agenda means presidential energy diverted from the unsolved domestic problems.

Second, there are risks as well as rewards in the switch from home repairmen to world states man. The Panamanians, the Palestinians, and the Politburo may look easter to deal with than the tax lobbyists, the energy conferees or the unemployedthey are not easily managed

And finally, on a political note, presidents—and especially Demo-cratic presidents—tend to be judged by the voters on their record in domestic affairs. You can stack the treaties as high as the Washington Monument and they won't. be as convincing to voters as & healthy economy, with more jobs and better pay.

The message to the touring President really is: You have to come home again.

Goebbels Diary: Bonn Best Seller

By John Vinocur

BONN, Jan. 3 (NYT) .- Thirtytwo years after the end of World War II, a fragment of the diary of Joseph Goebbels, the Nasi propaganda minister, has been published for the first time, of-fering a day-to-day account of the disintegration of the Third

The entries, marked by growing recrimination and despair, hlame Reich Marshal Hermann Goering for the collapse of Nazi Germany. Goebbels contends in the diary, two months before the country surrendered; that the outcome of the war could have been different if Goering, the head of Hitler's gir force, had been dismissed.

"It's in enemy air terror that the cause of our military downfall can be found," wrote Goehbels, whose official title was minister of popular enlightenment and propaganda, in an entry on

~ a day when he noted that more than 1,000 allied bombers had attacked Germany, Goebbels found it somewhat strange that "the Fuehrer is taking it all a bit lightly." But he quickly added: "That's the appearance he gives but deep inside he must surely think otherwise."

Although there are examples of strong political intuition, including a prediction of Churchill's fall from power, the diary is pre-occupied with examples of cruelty, fanaticism and pettiness. For example. Goebbels considered most of the German generals to be hourgeois and insufficiently Nazioriented. But he found one he could admire to Gen. Ferdinand Schoerner, who hanged soldiers if they appeared recalcitrant.

Terfect Chief

"Schoerner is the perfect chief," Goebbels said. "The details he has given me on raising the morale of his troops are absolutely sensational."

Goebbels failed to take much notice in his March 10 entry of U.S. troops establishing a bridgehead on the east bank of the Rhine River at Remagen, but he still held out hope that there would be some reaction to the altied bombing of Germany, "because world public opinion is not hardened yet to the point of welcoming such cynicism without

But Goebbels acknowledged increasingly at the end that almost none of his propaganda attempts were working anymore. At home, he recognised as a major failure the Nazis' mability to increase resistance to the aliles by persuad-ing the German recople that they would be treated as cruelly by the Americans and British as they might be by the Russians.

Twice in the diary, Goebbels exresses genuine satisfaction. On one occasion, he was particularly pleased when Hitler dismissed a propaganda official who, on his own authority, had struck a line out of a report Goebbels wrote because it was obviously untrue. The second situation was a discussion on March 14 of the fate of the Jews. "It's necessary to exdrew Young, U.S. ambass-dor to terminate these Jews like rats. once and for all," he said. Successor-Designate to Bourguiba

Tunisia's Premier Tested in Cabinet Crisis

By Thomas W. Lippman CAIRO, Jan. 3 (WP),-The man on the spot in troubled Tunista is a cautious, cost-spoken French-educated lawyer-banker named Hedi Nouira.

He has been Premier since 1970 and is the constitutionally designated successor to the ailing President for life, Habih Bourguiba. But whether Mr. Nouira has built enough of a power base to be able to hold the country together when Mr. Bourguiba dies was called into serious question again Christmas weekend in a Cabinet crisis. Six ministers quit or were fired and Mr. Bourguba, now a bedridden legend but still the country's dominant figure as the father of Tunisian independence, was forced to intervene to shore up Mr.

louira's government The President appointed seven new Cabinet officers, including his son, Habib Bourguiba jr., and in a radio broadcast reaffirmed his "complete confidence" in Mr. Nouira, "In one hour," a Tunis radio commentary said, "the President has put an end to the maneuvers of those who wanted to provoke a governmental crisis and to provoke a breach between him and his right arm, Hedi

Labor Unrest

Reports from the Tunisian capital say the crisis began when the minister of the interior, Tahar Belkhodja, was dismissed, apparently because he wanted to moderate the government's gettough policy of suppressing the labor unrest that has flared into violence throughout Tunisla over the last two months. The other five resigned in protest but Mr. Bourguiba supported Mr. Nouira and the new government is likely to continue to deal firmly with the 650,000-member General Union of Tunislan Workers.

What would have happened if Mr. Nouira was running the coun-with trade union politics, as secretary-general of the Tunisian trade union organization, and his support for the Tunisian independence movement brought him into conflict with the French authorities. According to his of-ficial biographic sketch, he spent much of the next 14 years in French jails, and at one time was imprisoned with Mr. Bourguiba.

Since his student days he has been involved in the activities of the Neo-Destour, Tunisia's only political party. He is still its sec-retary-general. In the 1950s, he was minister of commerce and finance minister, and from 1958 until he became Premier he was governor of the Central Bank.

The Business Tyrant Strikes Again

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss DARIS, Jan. 3 (IHT).—If Michel Piccoli builds another skyscraper, his fans will probably jump out of the window. It is time to call a halt. This able actor has fallen victim to perniclous type-casting. Myopic directors judge him fit only to impersonate the unprincipled, viclous money-grubber. He is at it again in "Le Part du Feu" (at the Ermitage the Biarritz and the Danton) as another obdurate Babbit who rides roughshed over his associates and makes his wife very unhappy. Piccoli needs a rest cure as a good guy in a Western to restore his histrionic health

This film, written and directed by Etienne Perier, is old shift. It is the boss melodrama that beset the stage decades ago and that the French cinema has appropriated and is offering as a starting novelty with important social impast.

There bass exhibits—sometimes a business boss, sometimes a po-litical boss and here a composite two-were inaugurated hy "Le Maitre de Forges" a century or more ago. They thrived heartily in the early 1900s. Mirbeau's 'Les Affaires Sont les Affaires." with its strong portrait of a tyrannical cuptain of industry. was the best of them, but Henry Bernstein's "Samson," Alfred Sutro's 'Builder of Bridges' in En-

Klein's "The Lion and the Mouse" were all box-office hits. Elein went down on the Lusitanla and big businessmen disappeared from the theater, though Hollywood cccasionally echoed the old school in such talkies as "The Wor of Wall Street."

"Le Part du Feu" is a sorry sample of the species, now fortunately extinct on the stage. Its couniving boss is painted as such an unmitigated bad man that even in the period of the peanut gallery he would have been whistled down. In the aforementioned plays the financial giant was not always dishonest, and his wife and family usually moved him with some lesson that money is not all. In the latterday French movies, however, he is always a crook. On this occasion he is not only a crook and cad, but he is defacing the Parlsian skyline by constructing a monstrous eyesore. He has cor-rupt officials at his beek and call, and when one of them is hlackmailed by a yellow-journal editor, he escapes exposure. His private life would never have passed the Hays Code muster. His junior partner, who tries to double-cross him in a dirty deal, is having an affair with his wife. He knows of this and encourages the Haison to his own end. Piccoli differs from the stage bosses of old only in that he does not wear a black cutaway coat and striped pants. Clau-dia Cardinale is the faithless his safe in her hatred, and Jacques Perrin is the disciple who would surpass his master in villatny. In all a thresome to-do. almost quaintly old-fashioned in 1978 despite its chic wardrobe.

Diane Kurys was 14 in 1963 and "Diabolo Mentine" (at the Elysées Lincoln, the Gaumont Colisée and the Gaumont Richelieu), her first film, is based on her girlhood experiences. The setting is a lyrée and the seaside of summer vacations a decade and a half ago, and the principals are two adolescent sisters in the painful process of growing up.

The younger is something of Many of the incidents of the girls' schooling have a pleasing humor and their teachers have been smusingly individualized, seen as pupils might see them. 'Diabolo Menthe" has not the sharpness of Claude Benris 'Un Moment d'Egareof an earlier generation, but it.

"Pouronol Pesi" (at the Biarritz, the UCG Opers and the Cinny Ecoles) might be described as a non-U version of "Design for Living" in want of some Noel Coward repartee. existence of this grubby trio of sub-bohemians is not alluring. Author-director Coline Berreal has presented the story with the distracting cut-in flash-overs of the 1960 New Wave. Samt Frey and Mario Gonzalez are the ponconformist beaux and Christine Murillo is the obliging

Having the Best of Both Worlds

By Henry Pleasants

LONDON, Jan. 3 (IHT).—Hearing and seeing the Royal Opera's new production of "Die Fiedermans" first on a BBC TV-2 telecast to Britain and North America on New Year's Eve, then last night at Covent Garden, was rather like having the best of both worlds: television and the-

Some of the less than best, too. Television the telecast was live from Covent Garden brought the viewer and listener closer to the principals and the fun they were having in Johann Strauss's masterpiece. But what was gained in intimacy was lost to some extent in the spectacle so richly offered in Julia Trevelyan Oman's sumptuous and tasteful sets and costumes. For these the screen provided too small a frame. They could be fully relished in the theater, along with a far superior sural reception of the score, but with a loss of the telecast's intimacy, more telling in comie then in grand opera.

In either case, this new production by Vienna's Leopold Lindtberg, with a polygiot cast speaking—the singing was in German—a polygiot script shrewdly adapted for the occasion and the cast by Gerhard Bronner, was thoroughly enjoyable. There were other than linguistic deviations from the Viennese original. Prince Orlofsky, tradi-

Shoppers Flock To U.K. Sales

LONDON, Jan. 3 (Reuters). Shoppers from Europe, estimated to have spent £750 million ($1.5 billion) in Britain's stores last year, flocked to London's winter sales today.

The British Tourist Authority estimates that nearly one third-of visitors' spending is done in cops and department stores, mainly on clothing and footwear. In addition to London, ports' on the south and east coasts benefit. Newcastle-Upon-Tyne takes Norwegian and Danish shoppers. Dutch and German visitors use Harwich, and French and Belgiar bargain-hunters often stop off at the Channel ports.

But the importance of overseas shoppers to Britain's economy is most obvious in central London. Harrods, the prestigious store traditionally patronized by the country's aristocracy, now claims half its business is done with for-

What became, then, of Vienna? Well, there was a good deal of it in Michael Langdon's prison governor, including interpolated reminiscences of his much-admired Baron Oohs, and there was a lot of it in the veteran Josef Meinrad's masterly Frosch, the tipsy jailer. Most of all, it was in the music, marvelously and idiomatically paced by that Vienna-schooled Parsi from Bom-bay, Zubin Mehta.

Holiday fare of quite a different character was offered by the English National Opera at the Coliseum with a revival of Colin Graham's 1965 Sadler's Wells production of Janacek's From the House of the Dead" with which Charles Mackerras is taking his leave as the company's musical director. It is a wholly admirable evocation of Dostoevski's Siberia, especially Ralph Koltai's sets and Annena Stubbs's costumes, but as an opera hardly more than that. The score—it was his last _is one of Janacek's finest, but in the absence of any dramatic continuity, one comes away thinking of it as a superb film score in search of a scenario.

Scala Telecasting 'Don Carlos' Live To 15 Countries

MILAN, Jan. 3 (AP).-Verdi's "Don Carlos" will be telecast live from La Scala opera house Saturday to 15 countries, including the United States, Canada, Japan and the Soviet Union.

The same opera, with a different cast of singers, opened La Scala's bicentennial season Dec. 7, but the telecast was barred in a dispute between the state-run Italian television company and Austrian conductor Herbert von Karajan, who had the singers under contract for a German film production.

Saturday's production will star Margaret Price as Elizabeth of Valois, Placido Domingo as Don Carlos and Elena Obrastzova as Princess Eboli. The opera will be conducted by Clandio Abbado. European countries receiving the telecast will be Austria, Beigium, Bulgaria, France, Portugal, Spain, Switzerland, Norway, Brit-ain, Holland and Yugoslavia.

The Debate Continues Across the Atlantic Over Subsidies to the Arts

By Jonathan Kaudell ROME (NYT).—After 18 years abroad, Paolo Carosone, a moderately successful sculptor and graphic artist, returned to his native Rome three years ago hoping to mount a few one-man exhibitions, publish a book on his

When France spent $200 million to build the Georges Pompidou National Center of Arts and Culture, which opened in Paris last year, critics in the United States pointed out that Washington spent only $100 million a year on assistance for museums, orchestras, operas and other cultural activities throughout the country.

But if income of artists and their total numbers are any indication of their well-being, then most Western European countries have cause for concern.

A report issued last year by the International Labor Organization, based in Geneva, asserted thet the incomes of artists in many countries were substantially below blue-collar wages. The ILO cited a number of Western European countries where it noted decline in the number of artshorting the dollar. Traders did not rule out the possibility that the situation may correct itself somewhat if normal commercial demand starts to give the dollar a lift. But the overall trend for the dollar appears to be down, they said, as long as the United States continues to post huge monthly trade deficits and officials maintain a posture of so-called "benign neglect." Some Say Mexican Oil Wealth May Worsen Social Problems

Over the last year, the gov-ernment of President Jose Lopez Portillo has used oil to strengthen Mexico's balance of payments and to renew foreign confidence in the country's long-term economic prospects. It has also indirectly suggested that oil is a panacea for all of Mexico's problems.

But as the vast dimension of the new oil wealth has become known, concern has grown in some government circles that Mexico is moving toward a massive, oil-financed welfare state. The real issue is whether oil allows the government to postpone necessary social and economic reforms," one leading economist said. "What's needed is an entirely new strategy of devel-

Ford Faces Auto Repair Bill

Ford Motor Co. faces an estimated $10-million repair bill on some 1974 to 1977 Ford and Meroury cars because a cost-cutting step on a key part made their engines susceptible to major breakdowns. Ford has quietly notified its dealers of a plan to pay for correcting major engine damage that could show up on some of its compact and sub-compact cars because of inadequate lubrification in cold weather. The repairs involva tearing down the cars' engines and the replacement of a number of fundamental internal parts. Ford estimates its cost for the work at $190 to $250 a car. The design flaw that could cause the problem exists in some 27 million four-cylinder and six-cylinder engines built in the last four years, but Ford maintains that only about 2 per cent, on about 55,000, will develop the serious engine trouble because it shows up only under extreme cold-weather conditions. So far only the company's dealers have been informed of the repair policy and it is not clear what Ford's position will be toward customers who already have had repairs made independently and paid for them.

U.S. Firms Cut Prices to Boost Sales

CLEVELAND, Jap. 3 (AP-DJ). Many U.S. companies have been trimming prices or canceling increases in recent months in an effort to pick up additional sales or resist inroads by competitors.

The trouble is, when the competitors get the same idea and no one picks up significant new volume, the result is lower profits for all concerned.

Corporate executives note that the current pricing battles must be seen in perspective, Overall, more prices are going up than coming down, and while price cuts are on the increase few industries are experiencing cut-throat competition comparable to the bloody price wars of bygone

Nonetheless, the price weak-ness is widespread enough to af-fect corporate profits, and to temporarily slow the nation's inflation rate. Many businessmen expect the trend to continue this Whether it will or not may be determined in the next month or so, as suppliers now are attempting to raise prices on steel, copper and a number of other products whose prices have been under pressure lately.

Growth Factor

will determine the success of increase in output for each hour many of these price-increase attempts. Price concessions in the last half of 1977 reflected a moderate slowing of U.S., economic growth and a far more marked sluggishness abroad, Because of the slowdown, orders have been below expected levels and factories are not as busy as they had expected to be.

One good indicator of the price trend; Only 37 per cent of purchasing agents reported paying higher prices in December, while 59 per cent said prices were unchanged, according to the Na-tional Association of Purchasing Management.

Basic Problem

So far, price concessions have come mainly on fairly basic materials, while prices continue to rise for manufactured items with a large amount of value added, says George Harris, vice-president for material at TRW Inc., a widely diversified automotive, aerospace, electronics and industrial-products concern. Even on manufactured items, though, prices are not always going up as rapidly as costs, producers com-

Price increases or an end to discounts are scheduled for a number of other products where prices have been weak recently, but purchasing men say it is not likely that the increases will become fully effective. Looking at a recently announced increase of about 8 per cent in glass-container prices, one big buyer says: "This is a soft glass market, and producers are playing a competitive game. I think they will wind up deferring the in-crease, cutting its size or discounting from the new list."

GRZIMEK'S ANIMAL LIFE ENCYCLOPEDIA

By Bernard Grzimek, Editor in Chief. English edition cdited by George M. Narita. 13 volumes. Van Nostrand Reingold. Illustrated. 7790 pp. $390.

Reviewed by Robert Bendiner

OF ALL the aspects of the physical universe that have preoccupied man through ages, none, to judge from his lore and literature, have so fascinated him as his fellow animals. Yet until recently the ignorance of even natural histórians concerning the planet's wildlife was exceeded only by the free-wheeling imagination that they brought to the subject.

For 16 or 17 centuries the most educated people were willing to take the word of Pliny the Elder that bears were born as tiny masses of unformed fiesh and claws that the mother bear gradually licked into the shape of a cub. Man has found it just as easy to believe in the toad with the precious jewel in its head, the hoopenake that rolls along with its tail in its mouth and all the rest of that fabled menageric right down to the elephant that never forgets.

. It is only in our own time that scholars have gone into jungles, savannas and rain forests of Africa, Asia and South America, virtually to live with animals in their own habitats, to observe them for months at a stretch instead of reading about them or studying them in the imperiect settings of zoos. The result has been such a burial of legend, such a flowering of fresh knowledge and such a pulling together of old knowledge that the animal kingdom can now be seen in a glory and enchantment beyond the dream of the ancient mythologists.

That glory is wonderfully com-prehended in the English edition of "Grzimek's Animal Life Encyclopedia"—13 volumes just translated from the German edition of 1969 as well as revised and enlarged. It should be the authority on animal life for st least the next quarter-century.

The product of more than 200 experts, including. Kari Lorenz and George Schaller, eminent students respectively of geese and gorillas, it numbers among its contributors three Nobel Prize winners. But to Bernbard Grainek, its editor in chief, director of the famous Frankfurt Zoo and a guiding spirit in the saving of East Africa's wild-life, must go the primary credit for a first-rate combination of scientific system, suthoritative information and narrative color. A delightful amount of it is sheer good reading—some in the form of first-person accounts, such as Schaller's exciting observations of a gorilla colony where the young play tag and defend a tree stump against other small fry, for all the world like a schoolyard scene at recess. The scholar who wants to know the weight and measure-ments of the giant ofter, the precise arrangement of a tree shrew's teeth, the mating habits of the puff adder or the geo-graphic distribution of the chack-

ms baboon will find it all bere, with the subjects arranged scien-tifically by animal class, not alphabetically. He will likewise be able to trace the evolutionary story of any animal order or suborder. At the other extreme the mildest animal enthusiast should enjoy the lush illustra-tions—from 1,300 excellent color plates and phylogenic charts down to the sequential sketches of a proboscis monkey in the act of jumping. But for the sheer joy of discovery, the layman will concentrate on the fascinating accounts that turn what at first seem like individual marvels into significant patterns. Read as an isolated item, any of them is absorb-ing; but the fascination lies in its being one of a thousand bits and pieces that illustrate both animal ethology and the fierce instinctive drive of the individual creature not only to reproduce but also to preserve in wondrous ways its species. A few examples to convey the flavor:

Lions, like other predators. are stimulated by moving prey, a fact that, in reverse, helped save the life of David Livingstone. Carried off by s lion, the great explorer recounted, he involuntarily went as limp as if he were anaesthetized. Spared a mauling and a quick dispatch, he inadvertently won just enough time to permit his rescue. The cornered rabbit, in the same way, is not "hypnotized" by the hungry snake. It simply knows instinctively that with the weakeyed snake's difficulty in distin-guishing a still animal from a lifeless object, safety lies in im-mobility.

The migratory instinct of birds is inborn (birds confined all their lives will sometimes flutter to the top of the cage when the magic moment comes to fly North or South), but the determination of that moment and the navigational aids used are greatly varied. Metabolic changes induced by the lengthening or shortening of the day have s bearing on the first; the sun. visual sightings, the stars at night and the earth's magnetic field—all seem to enter into the miracle of the second.

Such is the power and univer-sality of the sex drive that even the lowliest creatures can make _= themselves as ridiculous as huand error, will make vigorous ... sdvances to anything faintly sp-proximating the shape of a female frog.

With the power to extinguish other species as well as his own. man has only begun to concern himself with the folly of doing so. Unlike other predators, which keep their prey in numerical balance to the welfare of both predator and prey, man kills arbitrarily, often wiping out whole habitats as he goes. Reputable zoologists predict that unutable zoologists predict that unless the most imaginative action is taken, the world a century from now may be entirely without wild snimals. Even now, of the million or so species left, on earth, some 70 per cent are in and the species left. sects.

Such imaginative action as the world can still take will obvious. ly have to rest on reliable and widely disseminated knowledge, Here it is.

On the diagramed deal it might seem that South's game contract was doomed to defeat, but the decisive solved the problem.

West opened four diamonds, a bid that is usually based on an eight-card suit, and was here. North made a double that was technically for take-out, but will quite often be passed, no doubt boping that South would bid a major suit. Instead, South bid five clubs, and subsequently wished he had passed the double; four diamonds doubled.

Texas, ranked No. 1, lost to Notre Dame, ranked No. 5, in the Cotton Bowl; Oklahoma, ranked No. 2, lost to Arkansas, ranked No. 6, in the Sugar Bowl; Michigan, ranked No. 4, lost to Washington, which was not ranked in the top 10, in the Rose Bowl.

The highest-ranking team to win a bowl game was Alabama, No. 3, which beat Ohio State in the Sugar Bowl.

Notre Dame, Arkansas and Alabama immediately insisted that each should become No. 1 in the wire service polls to be made public this week. The National Football Foundation announced that it had selected Notre Dame to get the MacArthur Bowl, its award to the best football team.

Rushing Record In Orange Bowl By David Dupree

MIAMI, Jan. 3 (WP).-Ariransas, an 18-point underdog, humiliated the Oklahoma Sooners last night in the Orange Bowl,

The Arkansas coach, Lou Holtz, suspended three players-including his top rusher and his top pass receiver-for a dormitory incident while the team was still in Fayetteville, and his team had to get ready to play the No. 2ranked Sooners under the pressure of those suspensions and a lawsuit that followed.

Nevertheless, the Razorbacks came out ready to play. Sophomore Stars

The offense for Arkansas was provided by a sophomore running back, Roland Sales, who rushed for an Orange Bowl record of 205 yards on 23 carries and scored two touchdowns.

Sales played in the shadow of Ben Cowins, one of the suspend-ed players, all season, but this was his night. He ran inside and out and was a threat to hreak away every time he touched the

With Sales running wild and with quarterback Ron Calcagni keeping the Scopers off balance with his wide-open style, the Razorbacks were in control the entire game and the Sooners were handed their worst defeat since 1969,

Quickness Decides

Arkansas' defense was as impressive as its offense. Oklahoma was bigger and stronger, but Arkansas used superior quickness to shut down the usually explosive Oklahoma wishbone.

Time after time, Arkansas got quick penetration on the Okla-homs quarterback, Thomas Lott, forcing him either to pitch the ball quicker than he wanted or to eat it for a loss.

Oklahoma appeared to get more frustrated as the game went on, and once the Sooners found out they couldn't push Arkansas around—as they did most of their opponents—they seemed to lose much of their enthusiasm. Both teams went into the game with 10-1 records, having lost only to Texas. And now, Arkansas, given little chance by most even to stay on the field with Oklahoma, has a legitimate shot at the national champion-

Underdog Washington Beats Michigan

By Betty Cumberti

PASADENA, Calif., Jan. 3 (WP). -Washington a four-time loser this season, held off a Michigan rally by intercepting two passes in the final minutes for a 27-20 upset in the Rose Bowl yesterday.

The Huskies, two-touchdown underdogs, stormed to a 27-7 lead going into the fourth quarter on the strength of quarterback Warren Moon's two touchdown runs and touchdown pass of 28 yards to Spider Gains. But Michigan, ranked fourth nationally and co-champion with Ohio State in the Big 10 this year, remed to quit. Russell Davis ranmed two yards for a touchdown early in the fourth quarter and Rick Leach passed 32 yards to Stanley Edwards for another score with 3:44 left.

Michigan missed the extra point, leaving them behind 27-20. Then the Wolverines, now 10-2, go and drove quickly to the Washington 8-yard line.

Throws on First Down

But on first down, with 1:28 left, Leach angled a pass to Ed-wards, who bobbled the ball down his arms and into the hands of a Washington linebacker, Michael

"I'll take the hlame on that. It was a bad call," said the Michigan coach, Bo Schembechler. "We had all the time to the world, and it was right there for us. There was no need to pass. We had the two-point conversion ready to come in."

The Wolverines got one more opportunity. With 40 seconds left, they got the ball at Washing-ton's 48 after a punt. Leach threw one pass incomplete, then heaved a bomb to Clayton, but it was intercepted by left conerback Nesby Glasgow. The Huskies, who began the season by losing three of their first games, proved that they hold in the turbulent world of organized tennis. Last year, for example, Connors, Borg and Ilie Nastase, the season's top three stars, skipped the Masters in Houston, and Manuel Crantes won a somewhat hollow victory over Wotjek Fibak of Poland. That will not be the case this year. All of the heavy hitters are in the field, including Oranies, and most have used the last three weeks to rest and prepare for the $100,000 first

The luck of the draw would appear to favor the 21-year-old Borg, who holds a career edge over each of the three rivals in his group, Brian Gottfried, Roscoe Tanner and Raul Ramirez. Vilas may be more vulnerable than he was in piling up his amazing summer winning streak on slower clay courts.

Vilas arrived here early last week with his mentor and manager, Ion Tiriac, to train indoors. Ironically, it was a victory in the 1974 Masters in blebourne, Australia, that catapulted him to international prominence. Upset in Spain

Borg had won six straight tournaments and 31 consecutive matches before losing surprisingly to Sherwood Stewert last month in Soath. He has never won the Masters, but that is not the only reason for his lutense preparation this time around.

Last year, Borg won Wimbledon and the World Championship of Tennis title and was runner-up to Conners at Forest Hills. "I felt my record last year was good enough for No. 1," he has said on numerous occasions. The various ranking bodies disagreed, placing Connors sheed on the strength of a 4-0 won-lost record against Borg for the year. Borg has not played Vilas in the last six months. But the Swedish star has won seven of their last eight meetings and is 11-4 in the rivalry, which may loom large in Vilas's sensitive psyche. Search for Confidence Connors remains the enigma in the field. Ray Benton, the tourmight be bumped as the final qualifier that "he was phoning our offices almost every day to check on where he stood." Connors needs a title here to restore the confidence that his game requires to sustain its intensity. After runner-up showings at Wimbledon Porest Hills and five other Grand Prix events last year, the talk among rival players is that Connors has lost the magic that swept the world in 1974.

Can anyone other than Vilas, Borg or Connors win the Masters? Perhaps, particularly with the indoor setting, where lights, lobbing and the synthetic surface can affect the best-laid plans and previous records.

Rach Has His Strength Gottfried finished second Vilas in the Grand Prix in his best individual effort but still needs to handle the big guns. Tanner has the overpowering serve, but was inconsistent off the ground Ramirez and Dibbs qualifled for the Masters on consistency without showing the flashes of brilliance that characterized their 1976 seasons. And then there is Orantes, out of action since spraining his left ankle in the semifinals of the Manila Open. Orantes, it seems is always on the mend. But then, that is when the affable Spaniard appears most mischievous, when

The Spreading Decline

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK.—Notes on political When people are desperate for money, jobs, feed or medical care newsdays, they go to a bureau-

At present they have their own retirement program which permits them to retire early enough to take new jobs in the private sector and then collect a second retirement ircm Scoial Socurity. Congress shandoned the attempt to treat them like everybody else after their lobbies made it clear that this would make them unhappy.

In politics, as the old joke explains, power depends upon the ability to give a heart-warming answer when asked, "What have you done for me lately?" It is oow the bureaucracy, not the parties, that grants critical grace and favora

President Carter's failure in Congress last year is a measure of the emptiness of the Democratic party. From the public viewpoint, it seems to stand for nothing very vital to the transactions of daily life. Being perceived as an absence of intellectual, the Democratic party excites neither passion nor devotion to ideas, programs or leaders. For this reason a Congress that is heavily Democratic can frustrate a Democratic president with im-

The breakdown of the parties has been accompanied by the growth of the lobbies. When the parties ceased to be looked to as instruments of help in the community, their members were compelled to look elsewhere for constituents. They found the lob-The lobbyists conditioned party members to think of their constituents as large, sometimes rich and always faceless abstractions, such as labor, cil, electronteachers, blacks, business, conservation, etc. These abstractions provide the politician not only campaign assistance, but also passionately held dogmas and a self-preserving sense of the importance of loyalty to the conplay politics willbut regard for party, the tendency of politicians is to ignore party whenever necessary to satisfy their lobby constituencies. The most disturbing by-product of this development may be the growth of a psychological tendency among politicians to think of their constituents as abstractions rather than individuals.

Attempts to stop the breakdown of the party by insisting on intense party loyalty account for such aberrations as the Republican party's present effort to make all members prove their devotion to 1903, symbolized by the Panama Canal. To the outsider, the Republicans' absorption with the Panama Canal at this pass in history seems somewhat like a fire department's arriving at a burning tenement crowded with trapped tenants and rushing to the second floor to save an antique mantelpiece. To Republicans, however, the canal is a symbolic lisue meant to test members loyalties to the party, right or wrong. These loyalty tests have publicans. Those who fall are put on notice that they can never hope for high office. Sometimes they are sent to Coventry by having it demonstrated that the party wishes they would get out. The consequence has been a startling shrinkage of the Republican par-

The Republican party is disappearing through an irrational in-distence on absolute party loyalty. Despite the Democratic party's overwhelming majority over Republicans in voter registration, in any given year a Republican canstarts with about a 50-50 chance of being elected. This reflects how important television is, and how relatively trivial political parties are in presidential politics, Television's tendency to tip the election to the more composed candidate intensifies the breakdown of the parties since the successful candidate will usually concentrate his energies on mastery of television, rather than on mastery of politics. Once elected, he may very well lack the knowledge, practice and skills required to make his party fulfell his programs. Its members will probably cling instead to their constituent lobbles and reserve

East Germany's Lost Generation of Singers

By Murray Seeger

WEST BERLIN-The plaintive, mature female voice on the tape lamented, "I want to leave this place, yet I have to stay... I don't know where I belong."

The woman staging was Christiane Wunder, until a year ago one of East Germany's most popular performers. Now, like dozens of other recent exiles from the Communist state, the 30-year-old singer is struggling to adjust to life in capitalist West Germany. It is not easy.

"Man, I'm a musician," Klaus Jertzech said. "I want to play again and not constantly give interviews." The 35-year-old Jentzsch was the leader of East Germany's top rock combo and was known as Klaus Renft. Now he works for a radio station in West Berlin. The East German regime, seeking to quell political dissidence, has encouraged dozens of inhellectuals and artists to leave in the last two years. Some had applied for exit visus and others had their walking papers thrust upon them. "Prominent people like us were allowed to take almost everything with them," Jentzsch said, "Those without a name got jall or have to leave with only a suitcase in their hands." Nearly all of the expellers have ended up in West Berlin, just across the wall from their homeland. But others have settled uneasily in West Germany proper,

Postwar Generation

The adjustment for most of them has been painful Although they share a common language and elimic heritage with the people of their new homeland, the exiles are members of the postwar generation—naised in an orthodox, Soviet-style ety which has left them ill-equipped to cope with life in the West.

Some recent arrivals did not want to live in West Germany. at all. They had been taught that the capitalist two-thinds of prewar Germany is a materialistic state, always threatening to revert to its Nazi past.

Under the Communism of the German Democratic Republic most of the expelled extists, writers and performers were a privileged elite who lived as well as anyone in their country. The best known of the exiles is Wolf Blermann, a satirical writer and singer. He was expelled last year after giving a concert while visiting West Germany that was carried on

Although he was highly popular among an intellectual elite in the Fast. Blermann was not widely known to the Fast German public. The West German show introduced his critical comments on the Communist system to a vast new audience back home since 80 per cent of the East Germans can see television from the West.

Rejected by Dutch

Biermenn was expelled from East Germany as a result and sought citizenship in the Netherlands as a political exile. Dutch authorities rejected his request, so he accepted a West German passport and bought a house near Hamburg. Most other expellers were forced to leave after they signed statements protesting the expulsion of Biermann.

In his first months in the West, Riermann was heckled from both left and right-by anti-Communist conservatives because he publicly asserts his continued ellegiance to Marxism and by leftist radicals because he supports a democratic Communism and has carned a lot of money in the West.

For 350,000 marks, the Red Biermann buys himself a red villa." the conservative, popular newspaper Das Bild proclaimed. The price was equivalent to more than $150,000 and the sale was completed six months after his arrival in the West. More recently, Biermann has been able to travel and give concerts across Europe without generating any extraordinary interest, Here, as well, I will have to take a stand on the conflicts.

the ideas, the hopes, the passions and the struggles that affect people here," he told a West Berlin audience. And that means making myself useful for those people who are trying, on the side of progress, to change this society."

Blermann has reached a big Western sudience through a full-length movie which includes some of his concert songs as il as comments on life in the West. He also has criticized the factionalism that divides Communists and supported the development of Eurocommunism, which attempts to be independent of Moscow "They hack away at each other with an eagerness that would be better suited for the fight against bourgeois society," he said of the different brands of Communism. "As long as they do that, they will only be an object of ridicule and a soft pillow for the bourgeoisie."

The public I am actually singing for, even when I am here in the West, is the public in East Germany," Biermann said. In the movie, the official Bonn government spokesman Klaus Boelling, says, "Wolf Blermann is not our friend. In fact, we don't like him at all. But here he can sing freely." Other exiles have not fared so well as Biermann, partly because the competition for performers is much keener in West Germany and because they must appeal to an audience without subsidy from the government or Communist party.

Money First

Talking about the difficulty of putting a new band together, Jentzsch sald, "The musicians always ask for money first. Idealism or commitment don't count.

He said managers and record producers ask only, "Can I sell it or can I not. That is the question here... I could just vegetate here until I die. Nobody cares what I do-just so I pay my bills and the rent." Miss Wunder said she cannot sing in the West. She felt restricted in the small borders of East Germany but now feels as if she made a "step backward," Like the other recent arrivals, she was interviewed by Western security officers at a reception center in Marienfelde. We were made to answer stupid questions, as if I were a spy," she complained. "Our secret service men were more clever over there."

To her, the difference between East and West is: "Do I want to make money or do I want to stand there and really have something to say, and can we make music and look at each other and be happy?

'You'd Better Believe' PEOPLE: The Unicorn Hunters

The Unicorn Hunters have "finalized" their "process" of selection to "prioritize" this year's list of words worthy of banishing from the English language. At the first of each year, the group at Superior State College in Sault Saints Marie, Mich., issues a new list of words and phrases its members think should be deleted from written or spoken use. W. T. Rabe, who founded the Unicorn Hunters, said that the sixth annual selections were culled from some 2,000 suggestions from people scross the United States. Among the winners were "parenting," "medication" and the ever-"parenting," winners ' popular "orientate." "You'd better believe" was chosen in the phrase category, and a special very unique redundancy titive" award went to Glenn Roberts of Nashville, Tenn., who persuaded a local television station to stop using such phrases as "completely destroyed," "true facts" and "most unique."

Salinger, born in the United States of a French mother and an American father, was one of a number of public figures whose smes appeared on the French New Year's honors list. Actress Danielle Darrieux, fashion designer Pierre Bahmain, Notre-Dame Cathedral organist Pierre Cochercau, and former Gaullist minister Olivier Guichard were all named to the higher office of officer of the Legion of Honor. Comedian Richard Prvor surrendered to Los Angeles police, was charged with assault with a deadly weapon and was released on $5,000 bail. A warrant had been issued for the comedian over a shooting incident in his home, but he could not be found. Police said that they would have searched for Pryor if he hadn't given himself up. Two friends of Pryor's wife had filed a complaint against him, saying that wife and the friends and shot at them. As they tried to flee, the friends said, Pryor rammed their car five or six times.
